The documentary delves into the story of the friendship between the two men by showing scenes of James doing everyday activities with Dick with musical accompaniment. During the 1930s to 1960s Jim traveled the world extensively, opening up the eyes of the world to the beauty of his native land in Australia. He established a career which yielded a heap of surfing championships and he even became the first man to win the Molokai Intercept in Hawaii. The film covers his success in the surfing industry and his passion to promote his surfing career around the globe. Jim watched the film and said "Surfing is about one of the greatest sports in the world, but is often forgotten about. How was it that we moved from the war-torn world of World War II in Australia, to the calms of California, to even Molokai in Hawaii?" Dick Brewer replied, "Surfing has its roots in ancient Australia and has traveled the world with the earliest of surfers. The main difference between us is that I have seen surfing throughout the world. You only get to see what is shown on the television news."
